because of his continual glorification of New York's great thoroughfare, is anxious to get away from his home town of Jonesville. Abner Jones, his uncle, is very angry because Broadway refuses to bettle down and take a place in the gum factory in which he succeeded to his father's interest.

"I think he's absolutely too handsome!" Clara whispered cautiously.

Back of Whipple's drug store was the unofficial clubroom of the gayer youth of Jonesville, who demanded something less sordid than the two grim saloons or the tavern barroom. To the drug store Broadway retreated.

He found it more than usually animated. While he had been in the seclusion of Judge Spotswood's study one of the rare, dramatic episodes which Jonesville ever knew had come to pass-being imported from the outer world, of course. A touring car had taken at too high a speed a "thank ye ma'am" provided by the town authorities for the purpose of retarding motorists who endeavored to escape from deputy sheriffs. The result had been that the car's occupants had left it without intention, gone upward, cleaving the night air to heights, and, coming down, had found themselves almost simultaneously in a mudhole and a deputy's custody.

Having paid their fines for speeding and rescued their somewhat battered motor, they now were being bandaged. It was characteristic of the general state of Jonesville's mind that the visitors had first been fined; repairs for their bruised heads being looked at as a secondary matter.

The unfortunates numbered two, and they had told the fining and exultant judge of the peace that they were son and father, giving their names as Grover and Robert Wallace. Robert Wallace was of not much more than Jackson's age.

The drug store crowd was listening with huge delight to their subdued expressions of wrath. But with Broadway's entrance the younger of the victims recognized a member of his own indefinable fraternity. Within two minutes the young men were "old chap" to each other, which is a congenial sign.

"How's your machine?" asked Broad

No such service proved to be necessary. In fact the stranger's car was in such unexpectedly good condition that its owners insisted upon taking Broadway with them to his gateway. They reached it simultaneously with Clara Spotswood and Josie Richards, who were now engaged in that inefacient but delightful see-sawing which frequently occurs when a girl-friend takes a girl-friend home. While the elder Wallace took advantage of the halt to make one more examination of the car, before plunging off into the darkness of the surrounding farming country, Jackson introduced his new-made friend to the two girls, and they stood laughing inconsequentially. The young city man was much impressed by the two pretty country girls, and the two pretty country girls, especially Clara Spotswood, were delighted with the youth who had been brought so dramatically to their attention.

Josie burst into partially stifled titters, and her friend grasped her arm in giggling wrath to force her into a wild scamper down the dusky, fragrant village street. When they had once more fallen to a walk, Josie remarked, unwittingly:

"You're very silly. He's not half as good looking as Jackson, and you know it. Only we see Jackson every day, and

"O-h-h-h!" said Clara. "I've suspected that for a long time!"

"Suspected what? Keep quiet!" were the contradictory remarks of her best friend. Then: "And I'm going to he o lonely after he has gone! I'd like o cry. I almost did. Think of all the girls he'll meet there in the city! Oh, I hate New York!" "You've never been there."

"No. But I've heard about the girls there. Lots-of-them-drink-cocktails. And I hate that street he's always talking of-Broadway!" Then, suddenly, and, to the amazement of her friend, who instantly was filled, however, with a perfect understanding, Josle burst into tears, and, with a quick "Good night," rushed toward her home.

Before they parted the city youth gave Broadway his card.

"You've been very nice, old chap. Come to see me when you strike New York."

"It's absolutely certain-and I'm

To his amazement, the events of this extraordinary night had not yet ceased for Broadway Jones. He walked down the street toward home, filled with longing for the year's end, and found Sammy, Clara's small brother, asleep upon his doorstep.

"Hi, Sammy!" he cried, shaking a fat shoulder.

"Yes-sir; I'm goin'-to-be-like " the boy began before he was entirely awake

"I know, like Rip Van Winkle, But he didn't take his nap upon a doorstep. Why aren't you at home, in bed?"

Sammy rubbed his eyes. With dening deliberation he informed Broadway that the judge had sent him, with ed?" instructions to find Broadway and tell him he wished to see him. "He-said it-didn't-make-no-difference how-late."

"What! As near midnight as this? Child, it's almost ten c'clock! All Jonesville is asleep." "Ho-says-for-you-to-come. I'm -goin'." Whereupon he went

Jackson followed speedily. Such a hour must bode something cataclysmic. He found a worried judge pacing up and down his office floor.

"In the office, at this hour! You really want to see me, judge?"

"Yes," said the old man firmly, "I've determined that I will not be a party to deception.

"Who's been deceived, judge?" "Jackson, your father's will gives you his fortune when you're twentyone, not when you're twenty-two. Your uncle wished to keep it from you. I do not think you ought to have it now, but you're entitled to it."

Broadway gazed with a dropped jaw. 'Judge, I'm getting all mixed up. You say I get it when I'm twenty-one? Why, I'm twenty-one already!"

"I know you are. I know you are. I never saw the document until today. It was drawn up by Boston lawyers. And at first I thought I'd do exactly as your uncle asked-let you think it was as he had said it was. But I've thought it over and it seems to me you'd ought to know.

Broadway merely stood and stared. Your uncle thought that he was acting for the best," the judge insisted. 'He's been hoping you would settle down. When you didn't, he thought he'd steal a year from you, and give you one more chance. When he told me this tonight, I told him that I didn't think it was just right; and-finally-well, you know it all now." Broadway found the power of speech. "Good old judge!"

"Then you're not angry?" "I'm too happy to be angry. Got a time table about you?"

"Jackson, Jonesville was named aft er your ancestors.'

"No, you don't, judge, you wish you were going with me when I start. "Are you going to stay away?"

"Uncle says that in these days each man should have a specialty if he would be successful. I'm going to specialize on staying out of Jonesville. I'm hoping for success."

"Have you no friends here whom you dislike to leave?"

"You and the judgess, judge, and Clara. I'll miss Josie, too. And there are some down at the factory. Bill Higgins, I like him. He used to entertain me when we went in swimming and he got the cramps. Awfully funny when he had the cramps, Bill was; peevish but very funny. I shall miss Bill. But Jonesville, as a whole, judge -I'm not going to miss Jonesville, except the way a man may miss a tooth that has been pulled for cause."

The judge sighed. "Well, I had to tell vou. The young man looked at him with a strange earnestness. "Judge, would you get mad if I should kiss you?" "And you are really going, right away?" "It's going to be the quickest getaway Connecticut ever heard of."

CHAPTER III.

Almost as speedily as he had told the judge he would, Broadway prepared to leave Jonesville. There was a stormy session when the old lawyer told Abner Jones that he had made the revelation to the boy, but the old man's threats against him were quickly silenced when the judge reminded him that what he had proposed to him was fraud and that an action for conspiracy might be brought against him.

The traveler had to give the third negro his hat, so that he might seem to earn his tip; but he did this gladly. The taxi-cabman flew, scraming from his box, at the mere intonation of the porters' voices.

"Where to, sir?" he inquired. "Is this New York?" his fare asked, smiling gently in a way which made the chauffeur think he was a wanderer, returned unto his own, and wishful of facetiousness.

"You bet it is; just little old New York."

"I thought so. It seems so familiar. Well, I want to go to Broadway." "What part of Broadway, sir?" (Observe that this Grand Central taxi-cabman persistently said "sir." It was a tribute; Broadway knew it was a tribute and it warmed his heart.)

"Oh, all of it." "Take you to all of Broadway?" Even the taxi-cabman was astonished. "I want to look it over, for I'm going to buy it if I like it as much as I always have." The cabman eyed him shrewdly, desober, resolved to tie to him with a tenacity which never could be shaken off, climbed to his narrow seat beneath its narrow hood and yanked down the flag upon the taximeter. "My name is Gridley, sir," he volun-

"You may fire when ready, Gridley," Broadway answered, and then Gridley pulled the lever. Before the day was over Jones had bought a forty-horsepower limousine, a sixty-horsepower touringcar and a runabout. Gridley had turned in his resignation to his company and been measured for five suits of livery, of expensive cloth, exclusive cut, extraordinary color. Having done this he had asked a girl to marry him, had been accepted, had taken sixteen drinks and gone to see her mother, had then been thrown out a filted man and had returned to Broadway Jones, determined to live single and attached to him forever. The episodes had sobered him and he was quite himself when Broadway asked him what apartment he would recommend for living quarters.

'Quiet place?" he asked.

"Not for your new employer," Broad way answered. "I want it to be on Joy street, between Happy boulevard and Don't Care alley. The noisier the better if the noise is always laughter. I want it named The Smile and I want it furnished in bright red. Take me tions. somewhere where they'll sell me a good butler-fancy brand, no matter what the price. I want a butler who can go and buy a home for me-s home that glitters and is glad. Throw on the high-speed clutch.'

Gridley took him, in his brand-nev car (which ran as smoothly and as noiselessly and swiftly as a pickerel swims), to an employment agency which he had heard about, and there Broadway signed the lease for an extraordinary person, principally named published in Le Journal that not a sin-Rankin. "I have already telephoned for them. "I have raised your wages, Rankin, for long and faithful service. Let me see-you've been with me forty minutes. See to it that you do as well in future." "I shall, sir; and I hope you'll do the same, sir." "Find Mr. Robert Wallace in the telephone book. He's in the advertising business."

A moment later Rankin turned back from the little table at the side of the large parlor which supplied headquarters for the ex-Jonesvillian for the time being. "I have him on the wire, sir.'

"Fill talk to him." Broadway took the telephone receiver from his butler's hand and cried into the mouthpiece: "Hello! Is that you, Robert Wallace? . . . Well, this is Jackson Jones. . . Yes;

Robert Wallace was his guide, his mentor and his friend for some four weeks. After that he was his friend and mentor, but resigned as guide, for Broadway took the reins. HOW TO CLEAR AWAY THOSE UGLY PIMPLES

It is so easy to get rid of pimples and blackheads with Resinol, and it costs so little, too, that anyone whose face is disfigured by these pests is foolish to keep on with useless cosmetics, or complicated "beauty treatments." See how simply it is done:

Bathe your face for several minutes with Resinol Soap and hot water, then apply a little Resinol Ointment very gently. Let this stay on ten minutes, and wash off with Resinol Soap and more hot water, finishing with a dash of cold water to close the pores. Do this once or twice a day, and you will be astonished to find how quickly the healing, antiseptic Resinol medication soothes and cleanses the pores, leaving the complexion clear and velvety. Sold by all druggists, Resinol Ointment, 50 cents and $1, Resinol Soap, 25 cents.-Adv
